Overwatch is set to be one of the bigger games of 2016 and like many MOBA titles, Blizzard is adding new characters as the game progresses. The latest character to join the fray is Ana - and she's a lethal sniper that doubles up as a support character. If you haven't played Overwatch yet, it's worth a look.

Following the success of Overwatch's original mission, Ana served for many years as Strike Commander Morrison's second-in-command. Despite her responsibilities in leading the organization, Ana refused to step away from combat operations. She remained on active duty well into her fifties, until she was believed to have been killed during a hostage rescue mission by the Talon operative known as Widowmaker.
