

BlackBerry Not Quitting on Phones

Written by Benjamin "Zeus" Heide
Thursday, 27 October 2016 03:35 -

A few weeks back, the news reported that BlackBerry was done designing, creating and building phones and was thought to be hiring out some fresh talent to take over the money-losing venture. According to the new CEO, John Chen, BlackBerry will be pushing out more phones, rather than fewer of them. I'm not sure this strategy will work, but maybe if you swing at enough fastballs, you'll eventually hit one out of the park, right? While they won't do the actual building, there will be a larger BlackBerry presence than ever before.

"We'll license with partners to ensure our security story is maintained. Our partners will develop and distribute hardware. It expands the options for customers that value BB productivity and security, and expands choice."

Source: TheRegister