HP makes a lot of good decisions in business, but I'm not sure what they think will happen as they continue to push ahead with Windows Phones. Their next Windows 10 Mobile device looks to be a mid-range handset that actually has a lot going for it - other than the fact that it runs one of the least developed-for mobile operating systems. I think Windows 10 Mobile is fantastic, but when people don't use it - apps don't get developed for it and Microsoft has been known to leave people hanging. Take a look below to see what makes this phone worth buying still.

A Snapdragon 617-powered handset from HP would be a less expensive alternative to the Elite x3 - which uses a powerful Snapdragon 820 - while still supporting Continuum, a feature that the company heavily invested itself in with accessories such as the Desk Dock and Lap Dock.
