The YotaPhone was the first dual-screen device that actually worked. The rear screen has always been e-Ink and the second version was much more polished, had better specs and was a huge improvement over the original. The 3rd version is coming and it will feature either 64GB or 128GB of storage on a device that uses e-Ink on the rear (and gives you days upon days of battery life) and a solid full-color display on the front. For the price, this may be my backup device.

Okay, now that we have established this, let's get to the pricing information. The 64GB Black color variant of the YotaPhone 3 will apparently be priced at CNY 2,398 (approximately USD 360) while the White color 64GB variant will set you back by CNY 2,498 (approximately USD 375).
