While you can't believe everything you read - especially pre-sale numbers from the company that is selling the device - Samsung still claims that the Note 8 pre-sales are doing very well, and breaking records for any Note device they have ever produced. There is a large demand for the Note series of devices as they offer something that no-one else does - or at least that no one else does well. Here's hoping they have all their hardware trouble behind them and that the launch goes smoothly.

Samsung did not specify exactly how many Note 8 preorders it has received so far, but judging by how popular Note 7s were last year before everything went down, it seems that little has deterred Note fans from upgrading — not even the price tag.
