There are some legitimate concerns about AI - some of which you've probably thought about, and probably a bunch that you haven't. For instance, if there comes a time when we let AI make larger decisions on things that align with our human directives, what happens when the AI determines that is not the best course of action? Do we vote, impose our opinions and re-write the program, or let the AI decide. Intelligence doesn't require consciousness according to the producer of the video below. That could complicate things. I'm glad people are putting thought into this issue as I hadn't considered some of the ramifications.
