Razer wanted into the mobile phone game and have put a bunch of effort into designing and spec'ing out a phone built just for gamers. The screen is pretty incredible with a 120Hz refresh rate (think VR) and it has enough memory and RAM to make it very formidable. It runs Android OS and the weirdest thing about it, is that it is available in the Microsoft Store. Let that settle in for a bit as Microsoft didn't even feature many Windows Phones in their own store.

From its specifications alone, this thing is a beast and easily matches some of the best handsets from the likes of Samsung, LG, and HTC. But, like any newcomer, there is always some form of doubt, as the company is untested in this field so it will be interesting to see how the company fares with its first foray into the smartphone market.
