

Samsung is prepared for the worst

Written by Jason

Friday, 31 August 2012 14:59 -

After last weeks court ruling it was found that Samsung was infringing on some of Apple's patents and that might prevent them from selling some of their most popular phones in the the USA. Samsung isn't giving up the fight and will appeal the decision, but they have come out this week and said they are prepared for the worst and will modify their phones if need be to avoid having them banned in the USA. BGR has more details.

Samsung on Tuesday confirmed that it is willing to modify its smartphones if it cannot successfully fight Apple's request to have them banned in the United States. After managing a big win in its trial against Samsung, Apple made an initial request with the U.S. District Court in San Jose, California to ban eight smartphones including the Galaxy S II. Samsung plans to fight the request but if the company is unsuccessful, it confirmed that it is willing to modify the devices in order to avoid sales bans.
