

Sennheiser Makes Audiophile (Somewhat) Affordable

Written by Benjamin "Zeus" Heide
Wednesday, 09 November 2016 05:22 -

If you've wanted a great pair of headphones, but couldn't afford the rent-cheque it took to pay for them, you'll be happy to note that Sennheiser has heard your cry. They have recently released their HD 6XX headphones and these beauties are quite affordable. They replaced the discontinued HD 650 series that retailed for $500. With the new cans tipping the scales at an MSRP of $200, they will be popular I'm sure.

With the HD 6XX, Sennheiser kept the same audio quality from the HD 650 and made mostly cosmetic changes. For starters, the HD 6XX headphones are blue instead of gray and they come with a shorter 6-foot cable. This new model also uses an 1/8 in. plug rather than a 1/4 in.

Source: Engadget