We don't often cover hardware reviews from other sites on the front page, but this review is of HyperX's first mechanical gaming keyboard. Almost every other company has a mechanical keyboard and HyperX is actually pretty late to the party. The big question is, "Was it worth the wait?" To find the answer, you'll have to check the review.

HyperX didn't choose to go subtle with their packaging in the least. You can tell right away that the colour scheme is going to be black, red, black, red...and more black. The sole exception to that is the Cherry MX blue switch that you'll find hiding under every key. Personally, the blue switches are not my first choice for FPS as the tactile click's reset can be troublesome when attempting repeated quick taps.
