AMD has announced that they are bringing Ryzen to the laptop market later this year. In addition to the laptop CPUs they'll also be bringing out their Ryzen 3 lineup which will be more budget oriented. AMD seems to be trying to harness the buzz around their Ryzen lineup and should be interesting to see if their new offerings can generate the same hype as the Ryzen launch in 2016 generated. AMD has announced some more Ryzen processors set to hit later this year, including mobile-focused Ryzen processors for laptops, the Ryzen "Threadripper" for high-end desktop PCs, and a budget Ryzen 3 line, as noted by Liliputing.

The first Ryzen processors were released by AMD earlier this year, and were seen a major leap forward for the company's CPU offerings that actually managed to offer meaningful competition for Intel's popular Core i5 and i7 models when it came to both price and performance.
