Samsung isn't giving up on the Note brand, and have been working feverishly to put together a super awesome Note 8. In addition to a fire-proof design, the Note 8 is set to be released later this year - around September if all goes well. Samsung is sticking with their skinny and bezel-less design and this helps them squeeze a 6.3-inch screen onto the device with a solid 4K screen. It will keep apps running smoothly with the Snapdragon 835 CPU and 6GB of RAM. there are more details below, so go check it out.

A bevy of Galaxy Note 8 leaks have appeared overnight, the first Tekz24 which claims to have got its hands on a live image of a 'Coral Blue' version of the handset (above). Poyoco is back with a second leak and claims to have caught wind of the Note 8's hardware specs, which include a dual-lens camera, 6GB RAM, Android 7.1 and improved S-Pen support. There's no talk of an in-display fingerprint scanner, and News1 has reportedly heard from Samsung that this feature won't be coming due to 'technical limitations'.
