Looks like Microsoft will be updating their Surface lineup on October 31st, just in time for the Christmas season. The Surface devices really took off however I think it's safe to say their last version (or two) haven't been able to dominate like the earlier version did so this new revision should be interesting. Microsoft on October 31 is hosting its annual Future Decoded conference at the ExCeL convention center in London. On Wednesday, the Redmond-based company revealed to The Verge that Panos Panay, corporate vice president of the devices group at Microsoft, will be speaking at the event.

Panay will join other Microsoft keynote speakers including Joseph Sirosh, Julia White, Chris Bishop and Mark Russinovich, among others.

Microsoft typically unveils new Surface-branded hardware in October and this year looks to be no exception.
