If you missed out on the SNES the first time around, you may be happy to know that stores (online and retail) are being restocked. Starting on October 10, stores should have more of these available. There is no official word on how many more units have been shipped or will be produced, but if you can find one, snag it. If you don't want it, there are more than a few people that will pay $200+ for the micro console.

"Only individual units will available in stores starting today, while bundles and standalone units will be available online starting tomorrow, October 11. All U.S. stores will start to receive their shipments today, and will have their full allotment by Thursday, October 12, at the latest."
