Most TV brands have SmartTV features which will allow you to check your Facebook, listen to music, surf the internet and pretty much any other feature you can think of. But are these features really useful? Well, according to a new survey less than 15% of SmartTV users are actually using these features and Wired.com takes a look at why these features suck so much that no one is bothering to use them.

People aren't using their internet-connected smart TVs for anything beyond, well, watching TV. It turns out, nobody wants to tweet from their TV. Or read books. Or do whatever it is people do on LinkedIn. Worse, more than 40 percent of the people who buy a connected TV aren't even using it for its ostensible primary purpose: getting online video onto the biggest screen in your home. What gives?
