Apple launched their newest three phones on Tuesday and they range from somewhat affordable, to as much as your current mortgage payment. They start at the bottom end with the iPhone 8, followed by the iPhone 8 Plus. On the high end of the spectrum is the iPhone X (Ten). For some reason, Apple decided to release two generations of devices at the same time and skip the one in between. Make sense? No? Neither do the differences on how they compare. More details at the link below.

There's always a lot to consider after an iPhone event, and today we're looking at three new phones. The iPhone X is the new flagship, offering up an edge-to-edge screen and TrueDepth front camera for unlocking your device with Face ID. But those who were looking forward to something less dramatic along the lines of a 7S will be right at home with the 8 and 8 Plus.
