Apple is getting it. They are pushing their software releases out to the general public and taking their feedback to see how things perform, how features work and even overall system compatibility. Apple shouldn't have as big of a problem with compatibility as Microsoft does, but they are doing well to take into account a large install base for testing. Public Beta 5 is now available with Beta 6 released to developers. It's coming soon!

For those that have given up on hitting the Updates button in the Mac App Store, it's time to check again, as the new build of macOS Sierra is finally available. If you're not sure if you already have it, head over to "About This Mac" and make sure that you have build 16A294a.
