Linux is always being called dead, however, every few months they see a little spike and then quickly get forgotten about again by the mainstream public. One of the big surges they've seen is that Dell now offers laptops with Linux pre-installed and thanks to a new interview over at OMGUbuntu, it doesn't look like Dell has any plans of stopping that. Dell now offers multiple models with Linux and has no plans of stopping thanks to 'tens of millions dollars' of sales.

Curious about Dell's ever-expanding range of Linux pre-loaded laptops?

So popular Linux personality Bryan Lunduke, who recently took an hour out to talk to Dell's Senior Architect in the office of CTO — try saying that with a mouthful of doughnut — Barton George.
